Finding a trustworthy contractor

While the majority of home repair contractors are honest and reputable, unfortunately there are people and businesses who prey on consumers after a disaster. When talking with potential contractors, be sure to:

Ask about their experience – Ideally, the contractor should have at least five years of experience. Ask about projects they've done that are similar to yours.

Verify their insurance – Make sure the contractor has liability insurance and workers' compensation coverage.

Request references – Ask for names and contact information of previous customers who would be willing to talk with you about their experience with the contractor.

Check with the Better Business Bureau or other consumer organizations to find out if the contractor has a record of complaints about workmanship, cost over-runs or other issues.

Verify a Business Physical Location – Avoid businesses that have only a P.O. Box or contractors that have recently moved into the area.

DID YOU KNOW?

The average person spends 2 weeks of their lifetime waiting for the light to change from red to green

REMINDER:

PLEASE REMEMBER TO CONTACT THE OFFICE WHEN CHANGES ARE MADE TO ADDRESSES, PHONE NUMBERS AND E-MAILS.
